3 touches. Then stop.

The follow-up rhythm that's persistent, not pushy.

Day 0

The first note.

Their problem, one line of proof, one easy ask. Short enough to read on a phone between meetings.

Day 2

The nudge.

Two lines. Add something new: a number, a link, a sharper question. Never "just following up."

Day 7

The last word.

Close the loop kindly and leave the door open.
People remember who made it easy to say no.

Then stop.

Three touches is persistence. Ten is spam.

Day60 keeps it to 3 touches per person: day 0, day 2, day 7. Across four people, that's plenty of chances to be the one who got answered.

Four people. Three touches. You send every one.
